Women' s hockey world cup 2022 host country

In second grade, I was the girl who tried to get a head during p.e. and ended up falling back after the football hit me in the face. (I may be able to run half marathons now, but I'm still not exactly what you call coordinated.) So when Adidas Women invited me to go to Vancouver, Canada, to watch the U.S. play Nigeria in the FIFA Women's World Cup with 14 other women in the world of health and fitness, two thoughts immediately crossed my mind: (1) It seems incredible. (2) I hope we don't have to play football ourselves. Fortunately for me, the itinerary was filled with many activities that did not involve the head of a football. RELATED: Get-Fit Tips from the U.S. National Women's Soccer Team The trip was all about celebrating active women every day (even football challenged me), along with athletes we all know and love (we're watching you, Becky Sauerbrunn). First, there was a bike tour of Vancouver that took us along the beautiful sea wall and into sites like Chinatown (the city has the second largest in North America!) and BC Place, where we will later see the U.S. women's soccer team play. RELATED: Show your support for the U.S. Women's World Cup team with these trading cards After stopping for a sushi lunch, we made our way to Stanley Park for a yoga session with a view. Courtesy of Adidas Women During the bike ride, one of our guides had mentioned that grouse mountain is a must-see if you're on the hike (locals call it the Grouse Grind or God's Stairmaster because there are 2,830 steps up). So while eating a beetroot salad dinner and spring pea risotto at Edible Canada, a few of us begged Adidas.m representatives to wake up before 6 a.m. with us the next day and do the 90-minute hike before official activities were scheduled to begin. The trail was basically straight, but it was worth it, is there a better feeling than reaching the top of a mountain after a long hike? Here's the view from the top: For lunch, we kayaked along the Indian Arm River to a small island, where our guides grilled salmon for us (so delicious!). Then it was time for the culmination of our journey: the WWC game! You could feel the energy and excitement the second you walked into the stadium. There were 52,193 people in attendance, and almost all of them were U.S. fans who knew what was at stake: a win or a tie would allow America to clinch a spot in the next round of the tournament, while a loss could put chances to move on, or put it in jeopardy against some of the toughest competitors right away. The Adidas suite we had the privilege of watching the game fun benefits like free food and drinks, but it was hard to focus on it all while the game was going in front of us. I kept thinking about how players only get the chance to participate in the WWC once every four years and how amazing it was that so many people were there to cheer them on. (There are significantly more female women's football fans far this year than when the WWC was last held in 2011, says Adidas football chief Ernesto Bruce.) After an American goal that was ruled out (heartbreaking!), Abby Wambach scored at the end of the second half and all the American fans in the stadium were instantly on their feet. At that moment, as the Americans turned to hug and Abby jumped in the air in joy, each person there was a part of something bigger than themselves. (In case you weren't watching, the U.S. continued to win the game 1-0.) RELATED: The 12 most adrenaline-filled moments in the history of the Women's World Cup A funny thing happens when you wear all red, white and blue adidas equipment and you are with a group of about a dozen other fit ladies doing the same thing: People assume you are the U.S. women's football team. As we left the stadium, a man with a large American flag applauded and took a picture with us (this would be the main photo above). Later, while we had a drink at a nearby hotel, several people walked up to us to congratulate us on our victory. We just decided to go with it (it was more fun for everyone involved). And just like that, I wasn't the child who ran aground on North Island — I was on the U.S. women's soccer team (if only for one night). That's the good thing about sport: whether you're crossing the finish line of a race, reaching the top of a mountain, cheering your country's team at the highest possible level, or even being mistaken for a professional athlete, it's a high point you can't reach anywhere else. The U.S. takes on Colombia in Edmonton, Canada, tonight at 20 .m EST. You can watch on Fox Sports 1 or NBC Universo. And you don't have to miss a moment. (image credit: Martin Rose/Getty) Whether you're in front of a TV or traveling, you have plenty of options to stream today's game. Here's a look at how to tune in to the Women's World Cup, including options if you're traveling abroad. Where can I watch the Women's World Cup? Fox has exclusive rights to the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup in the United States, and broadcasts the games on its Fox broadcast channel as well as on its cable channel Today's final featuring Team USA will be on Fox. Fox is not the only broadcaster in the United States carrying the Women's World Cup, however. Telemundo has the Spanish broadcasting rights in this country. How can I use a VPN to watch the Women's World Cup? If you are traveling outside the country but don't want to miss the game, a virtual private network, or VPN, could be an ideal choice. In fact, choosing a service could be a challenge, but fortunately we've tested many different offers to find out who offers best VPN. Our first choice is ExpressVPN, which offers great speeds that will meet the needs of most users, but you have other options as well. ExpressVPN: Our favorite VPN service, ExpressVPN costs as little as $6.77 per month if you sign up for a one-year contract, and there is a 30-day refund guarantee. If you just need ExpressVPN for the month that the Women's World Cup is on, it's $12.95.ExpressVPNView DealNordVPN: Cheap and secure, NordVPN is just $2.99/month for a three-year contract, while a month's service costs $11.95. NordVPN uses 2048-bit encryption and facilitates the use of streaming services. NordVPNView DealTunnelBear: Performance is just average, but it's one of the simplest VPNs out there, and at $9.99 for a month's service, TunnelBear is a cheaper option if you just want to use the VPN during the month-long World Cup festivities. TunnelBearView DealHow can I watch the Women's World Cup without a cable subscription? If you have cut the cord, an HDTV antenna will allow you to pick up the signal from your local affiliate Fox or Telemundo. But if you're not going to be near a TV, you still have a few options. Fox broadcasts games on its Fox Sports Go website and mobile apps (Android, iOS), but you'll need to connect with your cable credentials. The same goes for the Telemundo Deportes app for Android and iOS. So this won't be an option if you've given up your cable or satellite TV subscription. You can try to turn to an over-the-top service to broadcast the matches. And since the packages we've included below include FS1, you can watch other games in the tournament, too. Just make sure the service you choose to carry your local Fox affiliate; not all services are. These services can connect you with World Cup coverage over the next few weeks. DirecTV Now: DirecTV Now is a convenient streaming service that includes a variety of channels, including Fox and FS1. It starts at $50 a month for 45 channels, including HBO. DirecTV NowView DealHulu - Live TV: Hulu's Live TV package will make you drop $45 a month for 60 channels. (FS1 and Fox are part of this mix.) Best of all, you can record up to 50 hours of programming at Hulu cloud DVR, so you can record the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup and return to the game at another time. Hulu-Live TVView DealFuboTV: FuboTV offers a nice selection of sports content - including Fox and FS1 - as well as standard content across genres, and comes with 30 hours of DVR cloud storage. It costs $55 a month, but for an extra $10 a month, you can increase the cloud DVR to 500 Fubo.TVView DealPlaystation View: A PlayStation Vue subscription lets you stream Fox and FS1 via the Access level of the service, which is PlayStation's entry-level package. Bad news, though - PlayStation just raised prices on all levels by $5, so you'll now pay $50 for the Access level. PlayStation VueView DealYouTube TV: The $50-a-month YouTube TV has over 70 channels that make it easy to the programming you want. And since it comes with Fox and FS1, you'll be able to watch the 2019 FIFA Women's World Cup without a hit. YouTube TV also has unlimited cloud DVR storage, so you can watch games at a later date.
